El series EUR MONTHLY report - 2025 MARCH (made on: 03/31/2025)

INVESTMENT POLICY OF THE FUND

MARKET SUMMARY

Bears dominated the US equity markets in the first half of March, with all major stock indices falling. The total capitalization of the US stock market fell by 4,000 billion dollars, a significant part of this huge sum ending up on European markets. It is difficult to say at this stage whether America has simply undergone a correction or whether we are witnessing the start of an overseas bear market, but it is clear that the belief in American exceptionalism has not prevailed. From a macroeconomic point of view, it is not clear where the United States is going either. Growth remains strong, but there are signs of weakening, for example with slowing household consumption. Inflation is more stubborn than the Fed had expected, limiting the scope for interest rate cuts. Europe, on the other hand, has received an extraordinary boost, with many investors looking for undervalued European equities after the sell-off in the US stock market. Significant money was poured into defense sector stocks on the uncertain outcome of the Russia-Ukraine war and the expected increase in defense spending. Germany's DAX stock index rose to a historic high, supported by the acceptance of Germany's economic policy turnaround and the massive infrastructure and defense spending that it entails. Long-term bond yields fell and the euro strengthened, partly due to a weakening US dollar.

After a strong start to the year, Central European markets ended March, and the quarter as a whole, with a good performance. Polish and Czech markets led the region this time, while the Hungarian market underperformed. The domestic floor only rose marginally, mainly due to a good performance by OTP. OTP again posted strong quarterly numbers and announced a better-than-expected dividend payout. Magyar Telekom also ended the month in positive territory, while Richter corrected over the period. Among the small caps, ANY Security Printing was the biggest riser, with the company reporting excellent results, record export revenues and a high dividend payment in the quarterly report earlier this month.
