MARKET SUMMARY

In September, the prospect of a soft landing for the U.S. economy emerged once again. Poor labor market and retail data confirmed market expectations of interest rate cuts. Meanwhile, disinflation data allowed the Fed to restart the cycle of interest rate cuts without causing panic. The inflationary impact of Trump's tariffs has yet to materialize, allowing the Fed to "overlook" this risk. Slowing growth, easing inflationary pressures, and looser monetary policy created a favorable environment for a stock market rally and a rotation into previously lagging sectors as the year ended. However, the mood was not so rosy in European markets. Weak macroeconomic indicators discouraged risk-taking. Political uncertainty further exacerbated the situation, with the threat of a government crisis in France, for example, increasing volatility. Some positive news came from the reduction in U.S. car tariffs, which improved the outlook for German exports. Inflation stabilized at around 2%, prompting the ECB to leave its key interest rates unchanged. The market does not anticipate further easing. This strengthened the euro in early September, which is bad news for European companies that produce for export markets. The key question for October is whether inflation will continue to moderate. This could stabilize bond markets and provide support for equities, although weak growth could hinder progress.

The Sub-Fund achieved a positive return in September. Since the technical breakout in August, the price of gold has been rising almost non-stop. The good news is that, after a long time, the price of silver has also started to rise, which in our opinion could mean that gold could reach the $4,000 level before the end of this year. Further positive news is that central banks have started buying gold again. From a fundamental perspective, we see that the US government is continuing to increase its national debt and there is uncertainty surrounding the independence of the central bank. Both factors could be positive for gold.
