INVESTMENT POLICY OF THE FUND

MARKET SUMMARY

In Switzerland, inflation in October fell short of market expectations, rising by only 0.1% year-on-year instead of the anticipated 0.3%. This marked the second consecutive month of lower-than-expected inflation. Energy prices continued to decline on an annual basis, although at a slower pace. Price dynamics in the manufacturing sector also remained weak, and the pace of price increases in services slowed during the month. The final rate setting meeting of the year will take place in December, and although the lower-than-expected inflation data could open the door to cutting the policy rate into negative territory, monetary policymakers would prefer to avoid such a move if possible. According to the central bank's inflation forecasts, inflation is expected to remain within the 0– 2% tolerance range over the medium term, suggesting that the current interest rate level is an appropriate strategy. During October, economic activity increased: the KOF Swiss Economic Institute's economic barometer rose to 101.3 points, placing it above the medium-term average. Short-term bond yields in Switzerland changed only slightly in October, with a 1-basis-point decline on the 1-year maturity and a 5-basis-point decline on the 3-year maturity over the month.
