MARKET SUMMARY

In February, the S&P 500 index declined slightly, while the VIX (the volatility index) remained at a consistently high level, indicating a strong sector rotation within the index. Nvidia's quarterly revenue exceeded expectations, but the subdued market reaction suggests that the positive surprise was already priced in. In terms of monetary policy, Kevin Warsh's nomination as Fed chair fundamentally rewrote interest rate expectations, shifting market attention from the short-term interest rate path to the possible reduction of the central bank's $6.6 trillion balance sheet. Futures markets are currently pricing in two cuts for 2026, with the first move expected to be postponed until June-July. The yield curve has stabilized at around 4.1% on 10-year bonds. On the geopolitical front, the resumption of US-Iran nuclear talks, Iran's 15-day ultimatum, and the concentration of forces in the Middle East have pushed up oil prices. European stock markets significantly outperformed the US, fueled by favorable valuations, a strong earnings season, and political commitment to increase defense spending. The ECB is expected to continue its easing cycle, but news of ECB President Lagarde's possible early departure raises some uncertainty about the continuity of institutional communication.

The Sub-Fund achieved a positive return in February. Gold started the month extremely volatile. It continued its decline from the end of January and stabilized at the $4,400 level. We believe that in the coming period, the price of gold will move sideways with a slightly positive sentiment. We do not rule out the possibility that we have already seen the peak and trough for gold for the rest of the year. Although geopolitical risks remain unchanged and inflation has stubbornly stabilized at a higher level than the US Federal Reserve would like, we believe that gold has already priced in many risks. The price of the precious metal has more than doubled in the past two years, and this movement needs to be digested.
