MARKET SUMMARY

The performance of the bond markets continued to be driven by the Iranian conflict that broke out at the end of February and has persisted ever since. Throughout the month, statements by Donald Trump aimed at ending the war repeatedly put downward pressure on oil prices; however, a lasting peace agreement has yet to be reached between the two sides. As a result, Polish bond yields remained volatile during the month. By month-end, however, one-year yields had fallen by 15 basis points, three-year yields by 19 basis points, and ten-year yields by 13 basis points. The market is currently pricing in three interest rate hikes for 2026. At its monetary policy meeting in early May, the Polish central bank left its key policy rate unchanged at 3.75%. While the communication was somewhat more hawkish, policymakers continue to maintain a wait-and-see approach. According to preliminary data, inflation unexpectedly declined from 3.2% to 3.1% in May, mainly due to lower food prices. Industrial production expanded by 3.1% in the fourth month of 2026. Retail sales also remained positive but fell short of expectations, recording year-on-year growth of 1.3%. Due to the geopolitical situation, uncertainty remains elevated, and the outcome of the war is still far from clear.
