VIG OPPORTUNITY DEVELOPED MARKET EQUITY FUND

USD-RP series USD MONTHLY report - 2026 OCTOBER (made on: 10/31/2026)

INVESTMENT POLICY OF THE FUND

The Fund aims to profit from the yields on global equity market investments through equity price increases and dividend income.
The Fund aims to achieve its objectives through equity-type instruments, primarily exchange-traded funds (ETFs) and equities. When compiling the equity portfolio, the aim shall be to create a long-term investment portfolio based primarily on fundamental analyses, while also taking into account the macroeconomic environment of the investment markets.
Although the Fund has a benchmark, in the event of a likelihood of positive trends at the level of individual equities / in certain sub-markets, the asset manager has the possibility to deviate from the Fund's benchmark to the extent consistent with the investment policy (and strictly considering the risks). As the Fund has significant exposure to stock markets, it is recommended for risk-taking investors with a long-term investment horizon. To ensure the requisite liquidity, the Fund may purchase domestic and international bonds, or enter into deposit and repo transactions, and the use of derivative transactions to cover currency risk is also permitted.
The Fund Manager minimizes the currency risk of the current series of the Fund against the Fund's target currency using currency forward contracts allocated exclusively to this series.

MARKET SUMMARY

In October, three mutually reinforcing forces shaped the money and capital markets: doubts about the finance ability of the investment cycle linked to artificial intelligence, persistently high real yields, and oil prices above $110 due to the escalation in the Middle East. At its October meeting, the Federal Reserve kept its benchmark interest rates unchanged, even though an interest rate hike had been priced in just a month earlier. The 10-year yield fell from a peak of 5.3% to below 5%. This was not driven by disinflation, but rather by expectations of a slowdown in AI-related bond issuance. Although the S&P 500 hit a new high early in the month, this was followed by the longest losing streak for semiconductor stocks since 2008. The main risk remains the November 3 midterm elections and the subsequent likelihood of a U.S. military strike against Iran. In Europe, inflation has remained above 3%, shifting the balance within the European Central Bank toward further tightening. The French yield spread widened to more than 170 basis points, and the 10-year yield temporarily exceeded 5%. The auto and luxury sectors were dragged down by weak Chinese demand, while AI-related electric vehicle stocks were weighed down by global market sentiment.
The Fund posted a negative return in October and underperformed the benchmark index by a small margin. U.S. markets posted mixed results in October. The Russell 2000 Index closed in positive territory, but the Nasdaq and the S&P 500 Index posted negative returns. In our view, this discrepancy could still cause serious problems in the coming months. The U.S. midterm elections in November could cause turbulence in the markets if the Democratic Party secures a majority in both the House of Representatives and the Senate. The indices were trading below key moving averages, which could make the markets vulnerable. In October, we slightly increased our exposure to Vonovia; we also purchased Lumentum shares but subsequently sold them. At the end of the month, the Fund was slightly underweight relative to the benchmark index.
