INVESTMENT POLICY OF THE FUND:

The AEGON Atticus Alfa Derivative Fund is able to invest in practically "everything", according to the anticipation of the Fund Manager. The Fund invests mainly in equities, equity indices and opens forward currency positions, but it can also invest in commodity markets. This total return derivative fund represents more risk than our "long-only" total return fund, the Moneymaxx, since it can use double leverage by investing into derivatives and futures. In other words, the value of the positions of the Fund can be the double of its capital resources. The balance of the Fund might change by as much as 2%, should the price of the fund's assets change by 1%. Leverage has the potential to enlarge profits or losses by the same magnitude. The greater the amount of leverage on capital you apply, the higher the risk that you will assume. The Fund is allowed to take long positions and uncovered short positions, as well. According to this, the Fund can bet on a bullish market or on a bearish market situation, too.

MARKET SUMMARY:

Equity markets went through substantial swings and moderate appreciation in July. PMI indices kept deteriorating, particularly manufacturing activity had been bleak retreating to levels not seen since Q2 2009. The US corporate earnings season started with rather mixed results, but kept improving throughout July, delivering an overall positive earnings surprise both on the net profit and revenues level. However, the key focus had been on debt concerns and liquidity conditions as periphery yields once again skyrocketed. Equities staged a substantial rally as ECB President Mario Draghi made supportive comments about the eurozone, however, the announcement lacked details. Crude oil recovered following the huge correction in June, helped by both the civil war in Syria and the very low level of the Middle East premium in WTI prices. The fund raised its equity exposure during the second half of July, adding DAX futures positions, OTP convertibles and selective raw material linked equities.
