MARKET SUMMARY:

European equity markets overperformed their American counterparts in February, although US indices reached all time highs after their shaky January performance. The Nasdaq Composite was in arm's length from its March 2000 highs at the end of February.

The dollar kept on strengthening despite the fact that momentum indicators are in overbought territory on all time scales. This may have been due to the announcement of the much-awaited ECB QE in the middle of the month. However, US long rates seem to be turning to the upside, somehow contrary to recent US inflation developments.

West Texas stuck into a 10 percent range with significant contango on the futures market, and copper's fall stalled as well.

Aegon Panorama fund increased its equity exposure up to around 50 percent in February. Half of it is diversified into European equity markets through futures positions, and the other half is put into US housing and consumer sector ETFs. 16 percent of the fund was exposed to fx risk, going long the USD against AUD, NZD, MXN and HUF.
