MARKET SUMMARY:

The Polish bond market had a mixed performance in April. The decline in yields seen until mid-April was mainly due to the asset purchase program, as the central bank bought more government bonds in the last two tenders than in the last six months combined. In the second half of the month, however, yields corrected and we witnessed a more significant rise in yields on the back of the inflation data released at the end of the month. Overall, yields on the 3 and 5-year maturities ended the month where they started, while yields on the 10-year maturity rose by 11 basis points compared to the beginning of the month. Moving on to economic data, Polish GDP is expected to grow by 4% this year and 4.8% in 2022, according to the April expectations. First quarter GDP growth was revised up to -1.5% and second quarter GDP growth was revised down to 8.5% from 8.7%. Year-on-year inflation accelerated to 4.3% in April, finishing well above expectations. This has put some pressure on the central bank, but Governor Glapinski continues to believe that inflation will return to the 2.5% level, which will not require an interest rate hike. The purchasing managers' index fell to 53.7 in April from 54.3 in March. All components of the index contributed positively to the reading, which has not been seen since July 2018. Industrial production grew by 18.9% in March, largely helped by last year's low base. As for the general government, the state generated a deficit of PLN 4,295.2 million in February, bringing the 12-month rolling budget deficit to 3.27% of GDP. After the surge in yields in January and February we increased our Polish duration exposure tactically, but later on we started to decrease our exposure gradually, which showed a meaningful duration underweight before Polish inflation data came in, which proved to be a good decision.
