MARKET SUMMARY

P series

In Russia, the conversion and cancellation of depositary receipts (GDRs) listed on foreign stock exchanges has started, which has exempted a number of companies from the cancellation requirement, so that shares in these companies may continue to be available on the London and overseas markets. However, state-owned or strategically important companies have not been exempted, so that in the case of Gazprom, Sberbank, Lukoil, among others, the conversion of GDR instruments into local shares is mandatory for all investors. According to the custodian's information, the possibility of cancellation of DR and conversion to local paper has been reinstated and they have indicated that they will not charge a fee for the month of July, promising further information for the rest of the period. This notification was sent for the following DR paper (Magnit, Lukoil, Mobil Telesystems, Novatek, Gazprom). The conversion of GDRs has started, so far the DR for Sberbank shares has been cancelled and replaced by local paper. The conversion for the remaining DR securities has not yet been completed.

In theory, access to the converted and Russian local market shares will be possible after the opening of the market for foreign investors, about which the Moscow Stock Exchange has published a detailed presentation. Only foreign investors will be able to trade on this platform, and the proceeds from the sale will be placed in a so-called "S-account". Due to current capital restrictions, there is still no information on whether withdrawals from the S-account will be possible in the future. Similarly, there is still no precise information on which stock exchanges investors from "friendly" countries will have access to, or whether there will be any Russian operators able to access the market for foreigners. This may be important in terms of balancing the two Russian stock markets, which will operate in parallel in the future, as while the Russian local investor market is dominated by buyers, the market expected to be created for foreign investors is more likely to see substantial liquidity after market opening rather than buying due to regulatory and legal constraints. However, as a result of the latest EU sanction packages, the launch of the dual market has not yet taken place, and we understand that this is unlikely to happen in the near future. In July the Fund Manager participated in an investor conference organized by the Moscow Exchange, where the previously stated position of the Russian Central Bank was reiterated that friendly and non-friendly guaranteed, and therefore the sale or redemption of units cannot be carried out for reasons related to the scope of the Fund Management's operations. The conditions for the resumption of continuous trading of the Fund are still not met.
